College looks to Asia

BY DEAN LARSON
 Longmead College will see its first Chinese and Indian students to establish its first cohort of international students.
 College campus head John Gault said confirmed leaders would work on promoting the college to both countries for a 2019 February intake intake.
 He added that while the college was opening in an China and India, does international open an international window from any country.
 "Students would need to be based in China and India, but that is where we are going to concentrate our efforts," he said. "We're targeting these countries based on their appetite for agricultural training in Australia. It is also about weight of numbers."
 Longmead College, near Chesham north of Shepparton, has been working through applications, policies and procedures needed to provide education and training for an international student cohort for almost three years.
 The move, which saw Longmead's seventh approval last year, represents a major step forward in attempts to establish the college as one of Australia's leading agricultural education centres.
 Mr Caldwell said a largely well-developed process set in train was now in place for the former college site about 200km north of Melbourne.
 "We've had to work to update policies, procedures and standards and have been busy establishing better agreements and contracts. We're now covering the final stage in implementing a marketing plan," he said.
 "It's really important that we get our houses and our tribal agreements right. These days an agreement will be working on our behalf and often training organisations.
 "It helps create active students interested in agriculture the idea is that they send them our way."

Enhanced experiences
 Longmead's annual international student intake remains at a maximum of 20. The move is designed to fit in with a traditional and growing demand to reduce intake.
 "So we may well see students with diverse medical studies or studies - in fact it will enhance domestic student experiences," Mr Caldwell said.
 The college has 100 domestic full-time students with a budget for a maximum of 140 as well as the international cohort of 20.
 "They key is to get the financial right and carefully manage college growth," Mr Caldwell said. "We're aware of what the number of international students might grow to in the future, but we have to be careful and just see how it goes."
 "The plan is to maintain close communication with federal and state governments to keep them informed of the progress and potential of what we're doing. This is a landmark circumstance in regards to agricultural training in our part of the world."
 "And if it is going to be successful, governments have an opportunity to take the lead or become active contributors in agriculture education growth in a growing sector."
